

CAN QUICKLY SETTLE PROBLEMS OF LABOR

Such Is Opinion Expressed by Louis F. Post, Assistant Secretary of Labor.

EXPECT ONLY SLIGHT DELAY

Shifting Employees Will Be Looked After Through the Medium of the Department of Labor and Positions Supplied.

WASHINGTON, November 30.—"If we put ourselves down to winning the peace by drives as we have to winning the war, the problems of labor and industry in the after-the-war period will be easily and instantly settled," says Louis F. Post, Assistant Secretary of Labor.

Mr. Post declares he does not anticipate any particular problems in the readjustment period. "We changed quickly from peace to war production," he said, "and it seems to me that there should be no reason why our factories and our workers should not be able to change back from war to peace basis as quickly as we made the change for such lack of raw materials as may exist due to seasonal conditions. But given the raw materials, plants which were manufacturing articles for peace trade before the war should be able to reassemble their machinery and change their processes back to the basis of peace production without so much confusion and delay as many people anticipate."

There is bound to be certain shifting of labor from plants at present solely designed for war work back to plants that were the big producers in peace times, Mr. Post believes; but he regards the Employment Service of the Department of Labor as a suitable agency for handling the problems that might arise from shifting and believes that it will be able to provide workers with jobs as well as to provide workmen for employers.

There is an element in the wage question which may produce industrial unrest and in that only does the country face danger from the reconstruction necessities, thinks Mr. Post. Even this may be avoided by intelligent agreement and conference between labor and employers. However, Post declares, "if employers are to be guided by the type of men who have figured all through history as the 'privileged class,' who think it their religious duty to refuse to deal with organized men, we will have trouble. If as much disposition will be shown by employers to adjust industry and its problems as the men they hire, the possibility of trouble will be reduced to a minimum."

"The worker who in peace times was able to earn $30 a week, has under war wages and war overtime, frequently been enabled to go home on pay night with $100 in his pocket representing his week's wages. The man who has experienced this is not going to be willing to stand a material reduction in it. It is true, of course, that he is willing to forget the overtime work he has been putting in, but even should there be a reduction in the cost of living, such a man, naturally, the worker is not going to accept a reduction of his wages to his prewar basis. That, however, is a matter of the individual, rather than the union."

"Collective bargaining will solve much of that. I feel that there should be continued existence of the agency represented through the National War Labor Board. The decisions of that board, providing for a review of the wage awards every six months on the basis of changes in the cost of living, and more particularly the awarding of the right to collective bargaining, if entered into thoroughly and in harmonious spirit by workers and employers alike, will do much to solve the problem through the operation of the shop committee."

"I do not anticipate any lack of jobs. People forget that we have been practicing abstention from what we want and need and that there is much production to be caught up with and much essential work to be done that has been neglected or postponed during the war period."
